After years of practice and training Rick has earned his Certified Journeyman Farrier title from the AMERICAN FARRIER ASSOCIATION

Rick Pickar first became interested in horseshoeing while watching his own farrier in action. Not afraid of hard work and desiring to be his own boss, Rick was inspired to attend and complete Shur Shod farrier school in Missouri several years ago. Suffice to say, he is now his own farrier and would like to be yours as well.

Rick enjoys the challenge of working with horses, ponies, miniatures, donkeys, and even goats with the goal being that the animals' feet are much improved after he has worked on them.

Rick values his clients, especially those who show that they value their animals by providing consistent hoof care with the recommended trimming or shoeing every 6 to 10 weeks. Animals that have been neglected in receiving proper hoof care suffer resulting in pain, poor performance, gait problems and hoof disease. Failing to provide regular hoof trimming or shoeing also results in additional work for the farrier who must invest additional time, energy and supplies in trying to achieve healthy feet on your animals. Expect to pay a bit extra for the added work for Rick who will diligently apply his training and experience to improve your animals' feet and subsequent health.

Rick has heat, and is willing to travel. He is adept at both hot and cold shoeing techniques as well as corrective work. Rick can make/shape his own shoes depending on the unique specifications of the shoeing job.

Rick resides in Washington County, Oregon and he tends to
